Telestream Honored with Sacramento Area Workplace Excellence Award

Nevada City, Calif., May 6, 2009 – The Sacramento Area Human Resource Association in partnership with The Sacramento Bee honored Telestream, a local high-tech video equipment provider, with the Sacramento Workplace Excellence Leader (SWEL) award at a ceremony held April 30 in Sacramento.

The SWEL awards recognize unique and exceptional organizations in the greater Sacramento area that are nominated by their employees. For the 2009 awards event, three categories were honored: not-for-profit, for-profit and government agency or public sector – in small, medium and large-employer categories – for a total of nine awards. Telestream won the ‘for-profit, small category’ award.

“To be recognized for something based on employee input validates what we have tried to do at Telestream from a cultural point of view,” commented Dan Castles, CEO at Telestream. “This award is about ‘how’ we do what we do and not ‘what’ it is that we actually do. To be recognized along with companies like Intel for the entire Sacramento region means we truly have something unique at Telestream that others value and respect.” Intel received the ‘for profit, large category’ award.

Applications were screened by three sets of judges using predetermined criteria. Judges were community and business representatives. Given the quality of the nominees and the growing interest in SWEL, the competition was strong, organizers said. Nominations for this year’s event climbed to more than 100 organizations.

In addition to excellent benefits and employee programs, employees commented most frequently on the open communication environment at Telestream. Each Friday employees gather for a company update, where sales, financial progress and opportunities are reviewed.

Telestream is a privately-held company that employees approximately 85 people in Nevada City.
